THE LOVELL GANG.

THE INTELLIGENCER'S EFFORTS

the Story Told by Clair-fhe Ex-Makes a Sensation

ory of the Wheeling exploits of the fanous Lovell gang of robbers and burglars, as obtained from Henry Clair, a member of the gang, and printed in yesterday's saues was the leading topic of conversation about town yesterday. Everybody was interested in the story, and all were auxious to know if there would be further developments. Some people were more anxious than others; a few were even excited by the statements printed and those hinted at. There was a general curiosity to know who the Wheeling parties were. It has been ascertained that the parties who live here, and who were named by Chair as connected with the operations of the party, have before been under suspicion by certain of the authorities, but that, though the evidence of their guilt was morally convincing, it was legally of no weight whatever. Now there is direct proof of their complicity, and an abundance of corroborative evidence.

CLARE GENDRIBLITY.

CLAIR'S CREDIBILITY. Numeroue developments resulting from the publication go to show that all that the publication go to show that all that Clair said was trustworthy to the minutest detail. Facts were stated by him which were not known to the public nor to the reporter who obtained him statement, which have since been corroborated. The case is a plain one, and will doubtless be followed out by the authorities from the clues handed over by the INTALLIGENCER. All the discrepancies discovered in Clair's statements are in non-essential particulars, which can easily be accounted for. Of course, triting incidents cannot be perfectly recalled after such a lapse of time, but in all vital essentials his story can be proven to be exactly in harmony with the facts.

Ners will at once be taken to provers with the facts.

Steps will at once be taken to procure the property, as to the whereabouts of which Clair is positive. That as to whole the step in the step is the step in t which Clair is positive. That as to which he can only expicature will also be recovered if the clues can be followed at this distant day after the stops of which he has knowledge. There are some technical difficulties in the way of prosecuting the parties concerned who are now at liberty, but it is believed these can be obviated.

Clair says when he went into the Ohio penitentiary he was appropriately called by his older partners in crime "the kid." When he came out he was a man, "aud," says he, "what I didn't learn about the ousiness in the pan can't be picked up in this country. I know all about tools now, and how to use them. I could make 'em, too, in a pinch. I tell you that's the surest way in the world to make a crook out of a yourg fellow."

"Can you converse with the other prisoners?"

oners?"
"Course you can. I didn't have much talk with Lovell and McNally, because they kept is apart pretty much. Just after we got in there, though, Clair said to McNally, at chapel one Sunday merning: If you'd let me have my way and we'd been quare with them fellows at Wheeling, we might a been safe there yet and foing a good business."

"What do you suppose he meant by Usal?"

that?"
"I guess they were to divvy with the Wheeling gang, and didn't do it. I always thought that was the reason they skipped out of Wheeling."
"Why didn't they divvy?"
"Why, McNally argued it wasn't safe to stay there with the police spying on us all the time, and lowed we'd have to ekip pretty soon, anyway, and he thought we might as well keep the swag we had. Of cotree, them follows at Wheeling can't equeal."

LOVELL.

"Would Loyell squeal, do you suppose?" the INTELLIGENCES man asked.

"I don't think he'd give anything Body the state of the state of the women, or to get even with some person. He'd put me in a look, if he got a chance. That's why I made up my mind to tell all I knew; I knew I'd have to croak if Lovell get a chance to make me."

It is thought here that when Clair's confession gets to Lovell's eyes, the latter will be glad to tell a good deal, partly to get Clair back behind the bars. He will probably be called upon and given a clause to tak if he will. The clicers at Cleveland suggest a matter which is worthy of consideration. They say the Warden of the Ohio ponitentiary will bring the two convicts here to testing any time they are wanted. The mer would probably tell enough to make any time they are wanted. The mer would probably tell enough to make any mpression that their testimony here would be worth securing, so that they might be brought here. A convictal probably tell enough to make any way jumps at a chance to get outside ties walks, where there are chances of escape to any nothing of the variation of the monotony of prison life.

Last year she had the same Society, and during the six months of her service visited nearly one thousand families, reading the Bible and praying wherever practicable, also distributing tracts and Bibles and gathering children into the Sunday schools. The majority of those visited were non-church-goers, many of them not having been in any church for ave, ten or fifteen years. The consolations of the gospel were carried to many aged, alck and dying ones. Some of these were converted in the closing weeks of life. Prayer meetings were held in neighborhoods with families who were unable through sickness, want of clothing or the care of small children to get to church. A number of very happy conversions occurred in these meeting was held weekly at the Eighteenth streat mission. During this winter Miss Boyd proposes holding gospel meetings weekly, in different parts of the city.
